In archaeology, excavation is the exposure, processing and recording of archaeological remains. An excavation site or "dig" is the area being studied. These locations range from one to several areas at a time during a project and can be conducted over a few weeks to several years. Excavation involves the recovery of several types of data from a site. This data includes artifacts,

This week, the news broke that archaeologists have rediscovered a system of World War One trenches on the Isle of Sheppey, an island just off the coast of North Kent, that had been totally forgotten. What's remarkable about these trenches is that they were dug in preparation for a German invasion.

Before digging the trenches, a magnetometer (detector) attached to an all-terrain utility vehicle will be used to scan the area. We will be excavating the soil to look for archaeological features and we will replace the soil once the excavations are completed. Noise level will be comparable to that of farm machinery, such as a tractor.
